KAFIR CORN AND INDIAN

Oklahoma Farmers Have a Great Variety of Crops.

TO DIVERSIFY FARMING

Certain Soil Is Best for the South African Seed.

Stillwater, O. T., March, 22.-The Oklahoma Agriculture Seperiment Station has issued a Press Bulletin No. 105 touching in the comparative yields of Kafer and Indian corn. It fellows in part:

Oklahoma farmers are fortunate in having at their disposal a large variety of crops from which selections can be made to suit any locality or particular line of farming. When commencing to plan for the various crops which are to be planted on the different fields of the farm it is important that the characteristics of the crops that are to be selected be considered. Plants, like animals, have inherent qualities and these qualities have to be taken into account when it is contemplated to place a certain plant within a given environment or use a special breed for a special purpose. No intalligent farmer would think for a moment of placing a large berd of Jersey cows on his ranch and expect to produce first class beef cattle for the market. He would select cows from the list of beef breeds taking those individuals which are best adapted to range conditions. Cilmate and soil are determining factors in such a choice. In northern sections where the winters are somewhat severe hair is well fitted to withstand such treatment while in other sections greater or white-faced cattle were selected. The qualities that are characteristic of these breeds, were not taken on in a single year, breeder who labored continually with a defaite purpose in view,

While the activity in mineral developnent is at its height the removal of all land restrictions has enabled many persons to secure options and conthacts that will be of vast benefit to the Chickasaw nation in the way of developing the country. There was much timidity at first on the part of the people to invest in lands, in the Chickesew nation, owing to the fact that a previous provision in the Indian appropriation bill gave promise of tying up land matters indefinitely, but, nasmuch as the objffictionable provision has been eliminated, the Indian has had little or no trouble lately in making lease contracts, and he will soon be able to convert his surplus land into each.
